

This is a conversation between Ralph Allison and Charity, a Professor CIE.

PAGELS, ELAINE

Charity: Basically what you are covering and what we wish for you to cover are, as you would state, the anthropology of ourselves and how we relate

Ralph: and how you live your lives

C: within the human race. And by answering your questions that we do, that gives you more of an insight into ourselves. Correct?

R: Yes. Now, just to show you what I was happy to see in here about when your man

C: What dearest is trying to look up right now is from the book

R: This is the book, The Origins of Satan by Elaine Pagels

C: And of course back in that time we were considered Demons

R: Well, Diamones, that was a neutral term

C: Until the humans decided to change it because it did not relate to what they had wished for themselves to be. They disliked the other aspects of it, another religion.
